which quadruples its value. The conduct of the Americans during the night alarm that Arabi Pasha was coming, contrasts remarkably with that of the French and Italians.

LONDON, July 18.—In the House of Commons this afternoon, Sir Charles Dilke, under foreign secretary, said: The identical note addressed by the Powers to the Porte is still unanswered.

Campbell Bannerman, financial secretary of the war office, replying to Sir Henry Drummond Wolff, Conservative, said that the government entirely approved the conduct of Admiral Seymour, and if Sir Henry wished to impugn it he ought to do so by a direct motion.

Wolfe then moved an adjournment of the House, and dwelt on the leading character of the government's replies. He believed that Admiral Seymour did not land the marines on June 11th, because ordered not to, and the government remained inactive in order to allow Arabi Pasha to gather strength.

Gladstone said he took the full responsibility of Admiral Seymour's action. The instructions to the land force at Alexandria were conditional, and it did not appear to them necessary to do so. Sir Stafford Northcote thought the question of Wolff relative to Admiral Seymour's authority to land troops very natural, and in view of the grave events at Alexandria, Gladstone said no instructions had been given to Admiral Seymour bearing on funds raised subsequent to May 15th.

dispatch to the "Times" from Alexandria, states that all the French marines retired from service, who have not served fifty-one months, have been ordered to return to the navy.

WAS IT WORTH THE COST?
The Rev. Dr. Pullman's Views of the Latest Arctic Tragedy.

"If you ask why I speak to-day about the death of Lieutenant Commander De Long in the Arctic regions," said the Rev. Dr. James M.
Pullman, from the pulpit of the Church of Our Saviour, yesterday, "I answer that because of all kinds is one of the themes of the Christian pulpit, and De Long was a hero.
The reader of De Long's diary who says, 'Let the North freeze; let no more brave men go there to die,' does not realize the supreme value to society of fact and truth. To wrench one fact from the frozen regions of the North is worth more than by any possibility it may cost now or ever can cost. Only the self-sacrificing know that this world exists for moral ends, and these are the who hail this Arctic tragedy as another instance of the elevation of heroism, which does so much to inspire the world and carry it onward.
We gravitate toward self-escape, and if the world was not full of pain to stimulate us we would degenerate to brutality. An impatient of this intitulation of flesh and sense which some men regard as the supreme end of life. It is better I say, to breathe one's last breath toward God in those waters than to seek the comforts of the flesh.

"As to De Long's diary, I have studied it carefully, and I can but think that he looked a mystery of the situation. It was a mistake to send a schoolmaster in charge of such an expedition. His love of knowledge and his attainments in science prompted him to go; but when a party of men are dependent upon such a man they find themselves at the mercy of the elements.

There is a time when, instead of talking about putting trust in Divine Providence, we should go to work. It is a question, may be, how far De Long had to imperil the lives of himself and others by carrying along that helpless wounded and dying man.

"But the best lesson we can learn from the diary is how a brave man can meet the inevitable. He kept his courage, he looked a mystery and never flinched. Not a solitary complaint do we hear; not a weak sentence is in the diary; not a touch of self. He knew that frostbitten man could not be saved, yet he carried him along; and later he knew that he himself must die—but not a word of that appears in the diary.
He was sustained by I know not what. He said nothing about any channel between God's spirit and his spirit, but I believe it existed."

CRACKING HIS HEELS AT EIGHTY-FOUR.
Abolition Journal.

The other morning in a grocery store some one remarked to Mr.
Thomas Dunn, one of our wealthiest citizens, now in his eighty-fourth year, that he was "getting old."

"I say," said Mr. Dunn, "I will show you that if I am old I have some life in me yet." Hanging his cane on the railing of the desk and placing his hat on a pyramid of canned goods, Mr. Dunn stepped to an alcove formed by the arrangement of goods and suddenly springing in to the air with the lightness of a latter-day acrobat cracked his heels together twice before touching the floor again. As if this was not sufficient to convince the most sceptical of his agility he repeated the feat. Others present attempted it, but did not succeed.

DEATH OF MRS. LINCOLN.
SPRINGFIELD, ILL., July 16.—Mrs.
Lincoln, widow of the late President Lincoln, died in this city at 83 o'clock to-night. She had been ill for a long time, and a few days ago grew worse. Last evening she suffered a shock of paralysis, and since that time lay in a comatose state until she died. Her son, Robert Lincoln, Secretary of War, left Washington to-night, and will be here on Tuesday morning. The funeral announcement will be made later.

FRANK JAMES.
He Passes Through Indianapolis
in Charge of a St. Louis Detective.

For years past there has been a great deal said regarding the James brothers, who created so much furor in the West as train robbers and murderers. Since the killing of Jesse at St. Joseph, Mo., by the Ford brothers, some months ago, for which they received a large reward, the authorities of Missouri, especially the Governor, have been exceedingly anxious to lay hands upon Frank, who, although not having quite as much notoriety as his brother, has figured in many train robberies, and taken a hand in numerous cold-blooded robberies.
The Governor offered a large reward for his capture, dead or alive, and the railroad and express companies who have been so often robbed by the James boys and their gang of followers also offered good round sums for the capture of Frank. These rewards have put the detectives of the country on their metal, and they have for months been on the lookout for the noted outlaw. He would first be heard of in one part of the country and then in another, but never could be traced to any certain locality.

About a month ago a telegram was sent to the country from Jefferson City, Mo., that the outlaws had at last gotten upon their trail, and that it was a settled fact that he would soon be in the clutches of the law, and it now looks as the party who sent that message knew what he was talking about, as will be seen in the next paragraph.

About 10:30 o'clock last night word was received at the Sentinel office that Frank James, in the custody of an officer, had just arrived over the Pan-Handle Road en route to St. Louis. A Sentinel scribe was dispatched to the depot, and on arriving there found a car that had just arrived from the East surrounded by a large crowd. On entering the car the scribe saw Captain Sylvan and Detective John Mc-Kinny sitting calmly in two men.
The reporter approached these officials and asked: "Is that Frank James," at the same time pointing to a man who was sitting in a seat close by, heavily ironed. Detective McKinny answered: "Yes, Detective Watkins there has him in charge."

The reporter then looked at Watkins, who, to say the least of him, has been a small amount of talking ability.
On being asked where the capture was made, the Detective replied:
"Near Philadelphia, on Friday night." At this juncture the man in irons said, "Now, what's the need of giving that d—reporter anything.
I don't want any more people here looking at me. You have me under arrest, and I should think you have the best of it, and are worth a drop."—Watkins seemed to take the prisoner's advice, as he closed his mouth as tight as an oyster shell.

The reporter, however, was determined, and again applied the pump by asking: "Did you have much trouble in capturing him?" This question brought Watkins about, when he laughingly said:
"Who do you think I have?" The reporter replied: "Frank James." Watkins then said: "How do you know this is him? I am not going to tell you whether it is not." The reporter asked if it was not James who it was, but the detective seemed determined to keep his own counsel, and refused to again talk upon the subject.

On leaving the car the scribe met Gov. Porter, who was at the depot to meet some friends, who said: "That is Frank James; I am confident of it." Chief of Police Williamson was also at the depot, and said to the reporter that it was James.

Officer Will Griffin, who went and brought some whiskey for the prisoner, had a talk with a Sentinel scribe, to whom he said: "That is Frank James for he told me he was.
After I got the whiskey for him he said to me: 'There is no use in tel-
